Call for submissions: Sexual violence in fragile settings

The Global Journal of Medicine and Public Health (GJMEDPH) is seeking submissions for a special issue on “Addressing sexual violence in fragile settings - practice, policies and research” to be published in 2022.

Topics include, but are not limited to:

- Forms, scale and patterns of sexual violence including rape, sexual assault, sexual harassment, sexual exploitation, child sexual abuse and other forms occurring across the lifespan;
- Impacts of sexual violence on individuals, families and communities with a focus on health and psychosocial consequences;
- Root causes and contributing factors for victimisation and perpetration;
- Medical and psychosocial interventions at the individual, community, and societal level that are evidence-based.

The focus will be on studies conducted in/on armed conflict contexts, humanitarian crises, protracted emergencies and other fragile and vulnerable settings, and that can identify relevant recommendations in the areas of practice, policy and research.

Authors are invited to read the submission guidelines available here.

Manuscripts can be submitted at https://www.gjmedph.com/submit_manuscript.php by July 1st, 2022.

Any inquiries can be addressed at gjmedph@gmail.com

The Global Journal of Medicine and Public Health https://www.gjmedph.com/ is a multidisciplinary peer-reviewed, open access research journal devoted to global health issues. Integrating biomedical, social and environmental sciences, we welcome a wide range of contributions with an emphasis on development and lower income settings.